10 Facts About Black History Month in Canada

- Mathieu Da Costa was Canada's first documented Black person. He served as an interpreter between French explorers and Indigenous peoples in the early 1600s.
- Olivier Le Jeune was the first slave in Canada. From Madagascar, he was sold into slavery in Quebec in 1628.
- Marie-Joseph Angélique was accused of burning 46 Montreal buildings, while trying to escape slavery, symbolizing Black resistance.
- 100,000 slaves sought British protection during the American Revolution.
- Black people faced discrimination after slavery ended. In the 1790s, many Black Canadians left Halifax due to lack of opportunities.
- Between 1815-1865, slaves used the Underground Railroad to come to Canada.
- Canada's first female publisher was Black. Mary Ann Shadd became the first female publisher with The Provincial Freeman.
- The Slavery Abolition Act of 1833 freed almost 800,000 slaves.
- Viola Desmond was Canada's Rosa Parks. In 1946, she was arrested for sitting in a whites-only section of a theater.
- Racial wage gap still exists in Canada. University-educated Black Canadians earn significantly less than their white counterparts.
